Excerpt: .Eastbourne, Brighton, c.--the coast appearing to be broidered with luminous beads. Early morning found us off the Start Point and magnificent views were obtained of the cliff scenery both here and beyond Prawle Point. We took breakfast off Plymouth in sight of the Hoe and the Drake memorial. At mid-day we were under way again, as there was no time to spare. On leaving we ran straight into bad weather; in fact, the day was one which not a few on board had little desire to remember; but, urged by 10,000 horses, or their equivalent, at top speed--they were fed with an extra 250 tons of coal during the voyage--the ship went steadily on, taking small notice either of wind or wave. We sighted the magnificent light at Ushant on the French coast on Saturday evening and soon entered the Bay of Biscay--here the...
